OBAMA COMMUTES 61 SENTENCES, BRINGING TOTAL TO 248

President Barack Obama on Wednesday commuted the sentences of 61 federal prisoners serving time for drug crimes, bringing his total commutations to 248 individuals, which the White House said was more than the previous six presidents combined. The move reflects Obama's push to reform the criminal justice system to reduce the number of people serving long sentences for nonviolent drug crimes, reforms that have garnered bipartisan support from lawmakers. "Throughout the remainder of his time in office, the president is committed to continuing to issue more grants of clemency as well as to strengthening rehabilitation programs," White House Counsel Neil Eggleston said in a blog post announcing the decision. US JURY FINDS GM IGNITION SWITCH WAS DEFECTIVE

2 General Motors sold vehicles with a defective ignition switch, but the part was not to blame for a 2014 car accident, a jury found on Wednesday in the first verdict since the company was forced to recall millions of vehicles. The verdict in a two-week trial in Manhattan was announced after the eight jurors deliberated less than a day to decide that a Saturn Sky in the car crash on a bridge in New Orleans was "unreasonably dangerous" and that GM failed to warn the public about its safety risks. The case was selected to serve as a bellwether, or test, for several hundred similar injury and death cases involving the switch, which can slip out of place, causing engines to stall and cutting power to the brake, steering and air bag systems. SAMSUNG REDISCOVERING ITS MOBILE MOJO WITH GALAXY S7

3 Early indications of stronger-than-expected sales of new Galaxy S7 smartphones suggest technology giant Samsung Electronics Co Ltd is emerging from a two-year decline at its flagship mobile business. Squeezed by Apple Inc in premium products and undercut by Chinese rivals like Huawei [HWT.UL] in cheaper devices, Samsung's smartphone profits and global market share have fallen and sapped momentum at South Korea's most valuable company. But several brokerages on Wednesday upgraded first-quarter forecasts for what is still the world's top smartphone maker, citing a strong start for the Galaxy S7 and S7 edge premium phones that were launched earlier this month. Boutique expands mission to empower low-income women

Nonprofit Career Wardrobe will cover five-county area with mandate to help twice as many job-seekers.

Andrea Blassingame, 33, still recalls the outfit she got at The Career Wardrobe back in 2010. It was a skirt, a blazer and a blouse.

"I still have it to this day," Blassingame said. "I'm a full-figured woman, so outfitting me is a little bit hard, and I was discouraged when I was in there. The lady helped me find something that fit perfectly. I wore it in the interview, and because I looked so great, I had the confidence to get that position."

Six years later, Blassingame is still working — and she is a board member at The Career Wardrobe, a Philly-based nonprofit that connects low-income women (and now men) with free or heavily discounted professional clothing out of its storefront at 19th and Spring Garden.

The Career Wardrobe, which also offers career preparation workshops, is expanding into Bucks, Berks, Chester, Delaware and Montgomery counties, after being chosen by Gov. Tom Wolf's administration to run the PA WORKWEAR program throughout Southeast Pennsylvania.

"For me, who used to be a client, and now as a board member, it is really amazing, because I know now that others in the surrounding counties are going to benefit as I did," Blassingame said. "I really am like a kid in a candy store with this expansion."

Executive Director Sheri Cole said with the expansion, Career Wardrobe expects to up its clientele to 7,000 people — double the 3,500 women it helped last year.

"When you get a great outfit and look great, you just hold yourself differently, you think differently. That's the confidence you need to sell yourself in a job interview," said Cole. "But it is only a win to me if that motivates her to stay with her job search."

"I wore it in the interview, and because I looked so great, I had the confidence to get that position."
Blassingame

The Career Wardrobe has been expanding a great deal recently — first in its storefront, where in recent months it consolidated its administrative offices and classrooms above the store and opened up a section with professional clothes for men.

The shifting of the PA Workwear grant for Philly exclusively to Career Wardrobe means another, similar nonprofit, Dress for Success, will be closing Friday. Dress for Success's board did not respond to a request for comment.

But as Career Wardrobe expands to Bucks and Delaware counties, it's relying on years of experience offering classes in skills like creating a LinkedIn page, writing resumes, conflict resolution, and interviewing skills.

Cole said these skills combined with a new professional outfit are very helpful to clients, most of whom are women in poverty and often single mothers.

"The clothing is the hook to getting women to focus on themselves," she said. "When everything you have is going to your child, focusing on yourself and your needs is hard — even though elevating Mom elevates the whole family."

Career Wardrobe sells heavily discounted clothing, 90 percent of which is donated by the public, to people who are unemployed, students or receiving SNAP or Medicaid benefits. Clients referred by other agencies get an outfit and free career counseling.

"It's so discouraging to just keep hearing 'no' in job interviews," Cole said. "Anything we can do to keep them motivated is so important."

For Blassingame, expanding the operation means more people struggling to find work will find a pathway to success.

"I never lost that confidence. I'm with a different company now and I still have it," she said. "That's what we want for all our clients."

California judge delays Cosby's deposition in sex abuse lawsuit

The stay is meant to prevent interference with the Pennsylvania criminal case.

A California judge on Wednesday delayed a deposition of comedian Bill Cosby that had been scheduled for next week in a sex abuse lawsuit to avoid any interference with a criminal case against Cosby in Pennsylvania.

Los Angeles County Superior Court Judge Craig Kaplan also put on hold any further deposition of Judy Huth, the woman who sued Cosby in December 2014 accusing him of plying her with alcohol and sexually abusing her at the Playboy Mansion in Los Angeles when she was 15 years old in 1974.

"I do think it's fair to stay discovery as to both parties," Kaplan said.

Kaplan, in agreeing with lawyers for Cosby who had sought to put his deposition on hold, expressed concern that if the deposition proceeded as scheduled, Cosby might be forced to plead his constitutional right not to incriminate himself because of the Pennsylvania criminal case.

If that were to occur, Cosby might not be able to present testimony in his own defense, Kaplan said.

The judge allowed depositions of other witnesses in the case to proceed, and Huth's lawyer Gloria Allred said she planned to depose Playboy founder Hugh Hefner.

NUMBER OF WOMEN WHO HAVE COME FORWARD WITH ALLEGATIONS

More than 50 women have come forward over the past two years to accuse Cosby of sexual assault, often saying he plied them with drugs or alcohol.

Earlier this week, Cosby lost his bid to throw out a defamation lawsuit against himself and his former lawyer brought by supermodel Janice Dickinson, clearing the way for a trial. REUTERS

Library celebrates 110 years on eve of temporary closure

Private funds are raised to open a satellite branch nearby so children in the neighborhood will still have a place to study.

JENNY DEHUFF
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

The Tacony Neighborhood Library — one of the original three Carnegie libraries in Philadelphia — celebrated its 110th anniversary Wednesday, on the eve of its temporary closing for renovations.

City Councilman Bobby Henon, Tacony Historical Society staff, librarians and neighbors came out for a kids' party, a reception for adults and a look back at the past 110 years of the library's life.

The library closes Thursday at 6 p.m. as part of the Free Library of Philadelphia's "Building Inspiration: 21st Century Libraries" campaign. The effort was made possible by a $25 million gift from the William Penn Foundation and aims at restoring and modernizing libraries across the city.

"One by one, each branch of the free libraries will be renovated under this campaign," said Suzin Weber, supervisor of Tacony Neighborhood Library.

"We're part of the first round."

She said three other branches are closing Thursday, and each will get an addition. Tacony's includes a small business center in its basement, which is intended to attract entrepreneurs on Torresdale Avenue and in conjunction with the Tacony Revitalization Small Business Project.

During the renovation, Henon's office is sponsoring a satellite library called the Tacony Library and Arts Building (LAB), which will be the temporary mini-library while renovations are underway. The LAB will open this summer and feature a community gathering space, more than 6,000 art installations and programming featured by the city's Mural Arts Program.

"It's definitely a scaled-down version of the amount of materials most frequently requested," said Andrea Zimmerman, a Northeast Neighborhood Libraries Cluster leader, who helps manage the library branches in all facets from staff development to community outreach to book collection.

"People would have to go to the [next] nearest library without this."

Henon said Tacony's is the oldest library in his district.

"The purpose of the library is to build community and educate its children. Tacony was founded under the philosophy of a good, strong education and community, and I'm happy to celebrate the 110th birthday of the library and all its people," he said.

Henon said LAB, which will open at the end of April, is being paid for solely from private funds. It was formerly a vacant building on Torresdale Avenue, and Henon said it fits perfectly with the ambiance of Tacony's commercial corridor.

"This way, the community doesn't lose the benefit of children's books and access," he said.

Asked if, in today's world, Philadelphia's libraries have a tough time competing with tech products like the Kindle or Nook — which in some ways have replaced paperback books for consumers — Weber said she hasn't noticed a decline in library attendance.

"Particularly not here," she said.

"Overall, there's a great push to improve the literacy level of both families and children through the city, and the library is one of the primary partners in that."

The renovation is expected to take roughly 18 months. The LAB will remain open for three years.

Lily, a 20-year-old Arabian pony, is recovering well and up for adoption. PROVIDED

Man charged over paint-covered abandoned horse

A horse that vets say was shot more than 100 times with paintballs is recovering, and the man is charged with animal cruelty.

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

A Rhode Island man who allegedly ditched a paint-covered, neglected horse at a Lancaster County stable is now charged with animal cruelty, prosecutors said Wednesday.

Vets said Lily, a 20-year-old white Arabian pony mare, was shot more than 125 times with a paintball gun after she was discovered with multicolored blotches all over her coat.

Phillip S. Price, 65, who was formally charged March 30, allegedly dropped Lily off at New Holland Sales Stables, where a horse sale was taking place, on March 14, prosecutors said.

However the horse wasn't checked in as a "horse for sale," according to the Lancaster County SPCA, and was believed to have been abandoned after the sale was over.

The horse was thin, had an untreated eye infection, was blind in her right eye, and was covered in paint splotches.

Though vets and the SPCA said they believe Lily was hit by paintballs, prosecutors have not yet charged anyone with that specific crime, said Lancaster County DA's office spokesman Brett Hambright.

"Obviously there was paint all over the horse, but we're not accusing anyone of paint-balling the horse," Hambright said.

Now Price, who was identified as having left the horse at the stables after surveillance footage was reviewed, faces three charges for animal cruelty, including for not treating Lily's eye for a medical condition that caused her undue stress and pain. He is also charged with dealing and handling animals without a license, and transporting and attempting to sell a lame horse.

Price allegedly drove Lily to New Holland from New Jersey.

Lily was found in a back stall in the stables in pain by the Lancaster County SPCA, who brought her to Penn Vet Bolton Center in Kennett Square, where she received surgery to remove her infected eye.

She is now recovering and gaining weight and is available for adoption.

"Lily is just the sweetest horse," said Dr. Nikki Scherrer, New Bolton Center ophthalmology resident, in a post on their Facebook page. "We're just thrilled with how well she's doing. She's getting back to being a normal horse, finally."

If convicted, Price could face a $750 fine per charge, along with restitution to cover the costs of Lily's medical care.

A reward of $10,000 is being offered for anyone with information that leads to the arrest and conviction of those involved.

Shapiro gets Obama endorsement for AG

Josh Shapiro serves as Montgomery County board of commissioners chairman and is running for attorney general.

JENNY DEHUFF
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

Montgomery County Board of Commissioners Chairman Josh Shapiro got a leg up in his race for attorney general when he earned the endorsement from the country's commander-in-chief Wednesday.

President Barack Obama said Shapiro represents "a new generation of progressive leadership."

"As an official, Shapiro has worked with the Obama administration on issues from health care and workforce training to criminal justice reform," Obama is quoted as saying on Shapiro's campaign website.

"Josh Shapiro is a true progressive with a strong record of standing up for Pennsylvania families. As attorney general, he'll fight to reform the criminal justice system to make it fairer for all and protect seniors and consumers. I'm proud to endorse Josh Shapiro for attorney general."

Shapiro, who first served as a member of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives from the 153rd legislative district, has chaired the Montgomery County board of commissioners since 2012.

In the early days of Obama's administration, Shapiro was appointed to a White House task force on health care reform. He's most recently worked with the White House on criminal justice reform and is chairman of the Pennsylvania Commission on Crime and Delinquency.

Speaking to the Metro on Wednesday, Shapiro said he was honored to have met Obama when he stumped for Pennsylvania Democrats at the Keswick Theater in 2006. He said he campaigned for the president in 2007 and 2008.

Shapiro CREATIVE COMMONS

"I'm incredibly honored and humbled by the president's support, and when the White House called to inform me, it was incredibly exhilarating and humbling," he said.

"I'm proud to be backed by a person I admire so much, and by someone whose work I think is incredibly important."

Just recently, Shapiro said the White House sent the secretary of labor to Montgomery County to recognize the county for its work in reducing the local recidivism rate.

Trump, Kasich ditch GOP loyalty pledge

Trump on Wednesday stuck by his decision to abandon the pledge, saying the Republican Party had not treated him fairly.

Donald Trump arrives at a campaign rally at St. Norbert College in De Pere, Wisconsin. GETTY IMAGES

Republican presidential front-runner Donald Trump and his two rivals, Ted Cruz and John Kasich, backed away from their pledges to support the eventual nominee, potentially setting the stage for a deeply divided party and a chaotic convention in July.

Trump said that if he becomes the party's nominee for the Nov. 8 general election, he did not care if Cruz supported him.

"I don't really care whether or not Cruz endorses me," Trump said in an interview on Fox News. "The only ones supporting me that I care about are the people."

Candidates had agreed to support the party's nominee earlier in the campaign, but Trump and Ohio Gov. Kasich both abandoned the pledge on Tuesday night during town halls televised by CNN.

"If the nominee is somebody that I think is really hurting the country … I can't stand behind them," Kasich said.

Cruz, a senator from Texas, did not explicitly abandon the pledge but said Trump wasn't going to be the nominee. "We're going to beat him," he said.

The crumbling of the pledge prompted questions about whether the party can unite behind a general election candidate and speculation that the Republican convention in Cleveland could erupt in chaos.

The Republican National Committee on Wednesday did not comment on the candidates' new stances.

"The pledge is simple, each candidate agreed to run as a Republican and support the nominee. We are confident that Republicans will unite to defeat [Democratic front-runner] Hillary Clinton," committee spokeswoman Lindsay Walters said in an email.

Trump is running an insurgent campaign that has alarmed many in the party establishment. Opponents have criticized not just his proposals on issues such as trade and immigration but his stream of insults toward rivals and the aggressive tone of his rallies.

On Tuesday, rivals criticized his reaction after Trump's campaign manager, Corey Lewandowski, was arrested and charged with misdemeanor battery over an incident with a reporter earlier in the month. REUTERS

US to deploy armored brigade combat teams to Europe in 2017

This will bring the total U.S. Army presence on the continent to three fully manned brigades.

American troops arrive in Swidwin, Poland, on April 23, 2014, in response to Russia's actions in Ukraine. Now, even more troops are planned to deploy to Eastern Europe due to Russia's recent military actions. GETTY IMAGES

The U.S. military said on Wednesday that it would deploy rotations of U.S.-based armored brigade combat teams to Europe, part of a wider effort to counter what the United States sees as Russian aggression on the continent.

The teams will be on nine-month rotations starting in February 2017, and will conduct military exercises across Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Poland, Romania, Bulgaria and Hungary, according to a statement from U.S. European Command.

Each unit rotating in will bring equipment that is more modern and will ultimately replace the current training equipment in Europe. A typical U.S. Army armored brigade has about 4,500 soldiers.

The decision means U.S. allies will "see a more frequent presence of an armored brigade with more modernized equipment in their countries," said Gen. Philip Breedlove, commander of U.S. European Command.

The United States has budgeted to sharply boost military training and exercises aimed at reassuring European countries concerned about Russia, which seized Ukraine's Crimean peninsula in 2014 and has worried NATO allies with its strategic bomber flights.

Current equipment used in Europe will be upgraded and stored in Belgium, the Netherlands and Germany, and will allow for "additional combat power, if and when needed," the military said. REUTERS

Firms target investment in Israeli cannabis R&D

Already a pioneer in high-tech and cutting-edge agriculture, Israel is starting to attract American companies looking to bring medical marijuana know-how to a booming market back home.

Since 2014, U.S. firms have invested about $50 million in licensing Israeli medical marijuana patents, cannabis agro-tech startups and firms developing delivery devices such as inhalers, said Saul Kaye, CEO of iCAN, a private cannabis research hub.

"I expect it to grow to $100 million in the coming year," Kaye said at iCAN's CannaTech conference in Tel Aviv this month, one of the largest gatherings of medical marijuana experts.

Scientists say strict rules, some set by the Drug Enforcement Administration, limit cannabis studies in the United States, where the legal marijuana market is valued at $5.7 billion and expected to grow to $23 billion by 2020.

Cannabis GETTY IMAGES

"In the United States, it's easier to study heroin than marijuana," said U.S. psychiatrist Suzanne Sisley, who has researched the effects of cannabis as a treatment for American military veterans suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder.

"With marijuana you have to go through added layers of government red tape. It highlights the way marijuana research is being shackled by politics," said Sisley, director of medicinal plant research at Heliospectra.

While scientific exploration may be restricted, 23 U.S. states now permit medical cannabis, and recreational use is allowed in four states and Washington, D.C. This is despite the fact that at the federal level, marijuana is still classified as a dangerous narcotic with no medicinal value.

In Israel, marijuana is an illegal drug and only 23,000 people have Health Ministry permits to purchase medical cannabis from nine licensed suppliers, creating a market of $15 million to $20 million at most.

But Israeli authorities are liberal when it comes to research. Growers work with scientific institutions in clinical trials and development of strains that treat a variety of illnesses and disorders.

Apple, Google routinely asked to help government access devices: ACLU

Other cases involving government requests for Apple's help are still pending. GETTY IMAGES

The American Civil Liberties Union on Wednesday said it had identified 63 cases across the U.S. in which the federal government asked for a court order compelling Apple Inc. or Google to help access devices seized during investigations.

The cases predominantly arise from investigations into drug crimes, the ACLU said, adding that data indicate such government requests have become "quite ordinary."

Representatives for the Justice Department and Apple declined to comment.

A spokesman for Google declined to say how frequently it has cooperated with requests or orders or how often it has contested them.

The Justice Department previously disclosed that Apple has received 70 court orders requiring it to provide assistance since 2008, which it obeyed without objection.

However, last October Apple contested a Justice Department demand for assistance in a Brooklyn drug case. Since then, Apple has objected to several other government requests for help accessing devices across the country, the company said in a court filing last month.

A U.S. judge in Brooklyn agreed with Apple and ruled that Congress has not authorized the government to ask for the help it demanded of the company. The Justice Department has appealed that ruling.

The ACLU report comes after the Justice Department withdrew a request for Apple's assistance in California, saying Monday it had unlocked an iPhone used by one of the shooters involved in a rampage in San Bernardino in December without Apple's help.

A variety of Apple and Google products have been targeted by court orders, according to the ACLU report. In one, an Apple iPhone 5 was seized by a man arrested in 2013 for importing methamphetamine from Mexico.

A California court ordered Apple to help the Justice Department bypass the passcode and copy data onto an external hard drive. The order does not specify which operating system was running on the phone.

REUTERS

After unlocking, Americans should still expect privacy: White House

The American people should "absolutely" still have confidence in their personal privacy despite the government's success in unlocking an Apple iPhone belonging to a shooter in the San Bernardino, California, killings, the White House said Wednesday. "The reason they should be confident in that privacy is because there are laws on the books that are assiduously followed ... that protect the privacy of the American people," White House spokesman Josh Earnest told reporters.

Twitter connects former 'Twilight' co-stars in need

ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Ah, social media. Is there anything it can't do? From making sure people nowhere near Ankara weren't hurt in a terrorist bombing to getting Instagram stars all lathered up over post notifications, social media entities just want you to know that they care. And they also care about bringing former colleagues together, like "Twilight" co-stars Anna Kendrick and Kellan Lutz. Kendrick took to Twitter to seek some assistance in the manly arts, tweeting, "Hi, I'm Anna, I'm alone tonight and I'm looking for a strapping muscular man to come over because butternut squash is hard to dice," followed by a series of kissy faces. Seems reasonable enough. And lo, who should respond? None other than sparkly second-run vampire himself, Lutz, who tweeted back, "Hi Anna, what kind of knife do you have?" Hey now, buddy, that's getting kind of personal.

James Corden steals J. Lo's phone, texts Leo

CBS

What would you do if you got you hands on the phone of a major celebrity? Obviously, use it to text other major celebrities. Well, that's just what James Corden did during his "Carpool Karaoke" special when Jennifer Lopez stupidly let her phone fall into his grubby paws. Despite Lopez's protests, Corden typed out a message to Leonardo DiCaprio — "Hey baby, I'm kind of feeling like I need to cut loose. Any suggestions? Let me know, J. Lo (you know from The Block)" — and hit send. And before long, DiCaprio responded with, "You mean tonight, boo boo? Club wise?" Sadly, they didn't go on long enough so that the rest of the world could benefit from DiCaprio's club-hopping recommendations. I wonder if he has a Yelp account.

Elton John sued by cop for getting all grope-y

Well, this is awkward. A former member of Elton John's personal security detail — who just so happened to be doing the work while off-duty from his regular gig as an LAPD officer — and Medal of Valor recipient — is suing the "Tiny Dancer" singer for sexual harassment and battery. The suit, filed in Los Angeles Monday, alleges that from 2002 to 2014, John inappropriately touched Jeffrey Wenninger several times and made sexually suggestive comments. The suit also claims that the incidents escalated "in frequency and intensity after 2010," though I'm not really sure what happened that year to make John so much bolder. John's attorney, naturally, is having none of it. "This baseless lawsuit is brought by a disgruntled former security officer seeking to extract an undeserved payment," Orin Snyder tells the Los Angeles Times. "These claims are patently untrue and contradicted by numerous previous statements made by this plaintiff. We will not give into his latest abuse of the legal system."

Emilia Clarke slams 'Thrones' sexism claims

It's hard out there for the Mother of Dragons, and the last thing Emilia Clarke needs while she makes her slow march toward the Iron Throne is all these naysayers complaining about how "Game of Thrones" is terrible for women. She would argue, rather, that it's just great for women. Just great! "There's so much controversy, yet that's what's beautiful about 'Game of Thrones' — it's depiction of women in so many different stages of development," Clarke tells Entertainment Weekly, waving off claims that the show has a sexism problem. "There are women depicted as sexual tools, women who have zero rights, women who are queens but only to a man, and then there are women who are literally unstoppable and as powerful as you can possibly imagine. So it pains me to hear people taking 'Thrones' out of context with an anti-feminist spin — because you can't do that about this show. It shows the range that happens to women, and ultimately shows women are not only equal, but have a lot of strength." Got that?

Tom Hiddleston is trying to be a little bit country

GETTY IMAGES

The acclaimed English actor does a Southern twang to play Hank Williams in "I Saw the Light."

MATT PRIGGE
matt.prigge@metro.us

Tom Hiddleston might not be the first person you'd think of to play Hank Williams. He's British, he's blond, he's not a singer. But the actor, 35, committed to playing the country music icon in the new biopic "I Saw the Light," which covers his career up until his sudden death at 29. At one point during our conversation, Hiddleston — who's juggled his duties as Marvel's villainous Loki with smaller, oft-challenging films like ""Only Lovers Left Alive" and the forthcoming "High-Rise," plus the current show "The Night Manager" — lets his proper English accent slip effortlessly into a Southern twang.

You have a history with theater work, but was it scary actually performing music live?

Pure white terror. [Laughs]

How did you overcome it?

You have to use it as an engine to motivate you. I moved in with a musician named Rodney Crowell, who's based in Nashville — a huge lifetime fan of Hank Williams. He saw Hank on his dad's shoulders at the age of 2, and he remembers it. He invited me to live with him, to practice. I came down and he was playing a set at this folk festival in Michigan. He said, [adopts a spot-on Southern accent] "Tom, I feel like this is a good chance to experience what it's like to play in front of an audience." Bear in mind this was 24 hours outside London. [Laughs] He and I played in front of however many thousands of people. It was absolutely terrifying — but thrilling. In that moment I understood why the Mick Jaggers of this world, the Bob Dylans, the Bruce Springsteens — why they do this for decade after decade. It's an incredible adrenaline rush.

Have you performed since the movie wrapped?

We had a screening in Nashville in October.

In "I Saw the Light," Tom Hiddleston plays Hank Williams opposite Elizabeth Olsen, as his wife Audrey. SONY PICTURES CLASSICS

There was a party afterwards. I got onstage with the band and sang a few Hank songs. It was really fun. I would do these bits between the songs, and I realized I couldn't do them in an English accent. [Laughs] I had to stay in character. I'm not about to drop my solo album, if that's what you're asking. I don't think anybody needs that. [Laughs]

In praise of singing

You've played musicians before, such as in Jim Jarmusch's "Only Lovers Left Alive." What have you learned about them you didn't know going in?

I have such huge admiration for musicians. Music is a huge inspiration for me. It's such a raw and immediate path to the heart. Singing is the most naked means of expression. Actors can hide behind characters, writers behind words. Singing is completely open. You think of Nina Simone, Amy Winehouse, Johnny Cash — people who wear their hearts on their sleeves, and singing is the purest way of doing that.

Translating emotion into music

Lucius speaks on their sophomore release, "Good Grief."

CHRIS LEO PALERMINO
@indiecalp
letters@metro.us

No sophomore slump for Lucius. GETTY IMAGES

Lucius' confusing, exciting journey since the group's 2013 debut record is best summed up in two words: "Good Grief." The five-piece indie pop outfit has relentlessly toured, become a colorful fixture on the summer festival circuit, moved cross-country from Brooklyn to Los Angeles and performed on network TV shows like "Late Night with Stephen Colbert" and "Ellen."

The frenetic turn of events come out in full force on the group's dynamic sophomore album "Good Grief." Front women Jess Wolfe and Holly Laessig and their band explore '80s synths, funk and even straight pop cuts without straying too far from their Americana roots.

Just before Lucius left for another nationwide tour, we spoke with Wolfe on performing on network TV and how the record came together.

What was it like performing on "The Late Show with Stephen Colbert" and "Ellen"?

I mean, it's very quick. Before you know it, it's over. Because of how short of a time you get to make an impact, you do whatever you can in the time that you have to have as much energy and be as alive and out there as possible.

What were you hoping to accomplish on the new record?

Just honesty … By the time we were able to sit down in a room and start thinking about songs or going through our voice memos and our lyrics and our journals and stuff, we were ready to purge. Just so much — so much feeling, so much emotion, so many memories, and the fact that we weren't able to release that at any other time made it more intense.

I was reading that you and your producer were looking to lots of different references on the record — German avant garde and more pop music like Taylor Swift. How were you able to marry all of these influences while recording?

[For] each song, we would each find one song that would directly inspire it. From Judee Sill to Beyonce, the reason why it was so diverse and eclectic is because each of us had a different sort of idea of the landscape of the song. When you think about recording a song, maybe the guitarist is thinking about the guitars and the vocalist is thinking about the vocals and the drummer's thinking about certain production elements. It helped us to think outside of our usual sort of approach.

WHERE TO EAT, DRINK & PLAY

Prime meat

Forget the masculine, dark steakhouses of years past — these new restaurants are attracting a younger, hipper crowd.

A.D. AMOROSI
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

Philly, the old-school steakhouse you love is changing. Bright new restaurants with quirky light fixtures, hip furnishings made of reclaimed elements and farm-to-table menus replace dark woods, musky leather and Chicago-shipped steaks of yore.

Take Morimoto's new steakhouse program — a stark space with Holstein meats, Australian-bred Wagyu and Japanese A5 certified Wagyu, all free from growth hormones and antibiotics. This isn't a martini, cigar and brontosaurus meal a la "Mad Men," but something subtler and cooler.

"The simplicity of Morimoto's design: the woods, the wave patterns along our walls, give an air of nature," says Chef Benjamin Dayag.

Even The Palm at the Bellevue Hotel — the height of power lunching since 1989 — is closed until 2017 for a sleeker renovation.

"The vibe will be similar — a place where important people dine and drink — but with a fresher feel," says artist Zack Bird, who'll paint mostly cityscapes at the redone Palm rather than old local faces.

The Bellevue isn't alone. Newer Philly hotels are also adopting the twin notions of moder design and exclusive, mostly local meats.

Michele Simpson, Sonesta Hotel Philadelphia's marketing director, says

The A5 Wagyu is artfully plated at Morimoto. REESE AMOROSI

when they sought to add a steakhouse to their program, they wanted one "for Philly millennials."

The 18th Street hotel found it in Ruth's Chris Steakhouse, which will move from its Broad Street home of 30 years to Sonesta this spring. Marsha Brown, owner of Ruth's Chris, promises "warm woods of cypress, exposed brick walls and contemporary lighting" — a breezier atmosphere than in the past.

The Logan Hotel, which took over Philly's classic Four Seasons and updated it, "is a new social hub," says Sandy Heydt, the hotel's marketing director. Its colorfully cool steakhouse, Urban Farmer, features neon lights juxtaposed with barn-wood tables.

The menu at Urban Farmer also takes a healthful approach. The sauces are light, the vegetables — like the steaks — are locally sourced and elegantly prepared. And the meats are lean and mean.

"Traditional steakhouse beef is prime; very heavy in fat," says Urban Farmer General Manager Troy Christian. "We're healthier because we know our beef, how it's fed and more importantly how tenderly it is raised."

Urban Farmer describes its vibe as "rural chic." PROVIDED

Craft beer and T. Rex

The Philadelphia Restaurant Festival hits the Academy of Natural Sciences.

A.D. AMOROSI
@MetroPhilly
letters@metro.us

What happens when the Academy of Natural Sciences meets the first Philadelphia Restaurant Festival this Thursday?

Twenty-five local restaurateurs and hungry foodies mingle with old brontosauruses and live butterflies.

"We wanted to create a unique, affordable culinary experience where our customers could, not only go on a Philly food journey, but also take a trip around worlds — known, unknown — all under one roof," says Ray Sheehan, president of Philly2Night.com, who organized the event.

The idea of noshing Doc Magrogan oysters, Eclat chocolates and sipping Bluecoat gin (among others) in a historic 200-year-old museum sounded spectacular to hosts and venue alike.

"The academy's marvelous live animals and captivating dinosaurs, our special exhibit 'Tarantulas: Alive and Up Close,' all that food — it's going to be a wild party," says Carolyn Belardo, director of public relations at the Academy of Natural Sciences. "I hope our guests will raise glasses in a Jurassic toast to our amazing T. Rex."

4 Best honeymoon destinations for 2016

It's time to plan the fun part of the wedding.

Fodor's Travel

"Honeymoons last not nowadays above a fortnight," Samuel Richardson observed in his 18th-century novel "Clarissa." He had a point: While love certainly may last beyond two weeks, precious vacation time may not, which makes choosing the right honeymoon destination even more crucial. Start a marriage off on the right foot by first figuring out what type of travel fits your newly-wed fantasy. Whether you crave the beach, some outdoor adventure, a little culture or an extended party, there's somewhere in the world for both of you to make your first memories together. Here are our top picks for 2016, each complete with timely appeal. KATHLEEN SQUIRES

FOR NATURE LOVERS

Yellowstone

This summer, the National Park Service commemorates its centennial, which means parks across America will be celebrating with special events. Mark the occasion by visiting Yellowstone, America's first park and the home of Old Faithful, hundreds of grizzlies and the country's most spectacular wilderness. Visitors can get close with nature in every way imaginable, via cycling, river rafting, hiking, wildlife safaris, fishing, boating, bird watching, horseback riding and swimming.

Where to Stay: Spring Creek Ranch in Jackson Hole, Wyoming, is celebrating the occasion with multiday wolf and bear safaris through Yellowstone and Grand Teton National Parks. The ranch also includes rooms with sweeping mountain views and fireplaces, plus an award-winning restaurant and spa.

FOR CRUISERS

Iceland

In 2016 Windstar Cruises, the world's smallest luxury cruise line, launches a brand-new itinerary: Around Iceland takes guests on a seven-day sail from Reykjavik, stopping at five of the country's outlying islands. Highlights include a soak in the famous Blue Lagoon; the renowned Hengifoss and Godafoss waterfalls; and Vigur Island, populated with puffins and black guillemots. The all-suite Star Legend yacht accommodates only 200 people, perfect for honeymooners who enjoy an intimate sail with personalized service.

Where to Stay: All suites have been recently refurbished. But it's your honeymoon, so why not spring for one of the four classic suites, with private verandas?

FOR OENOPHILES

Umbria

The birthplace of St. Valentine provides couples with a host of reasons to bypass more touristy neighbors in favor of Italy's heart. Scenic vineyards producing terrific wines is reason No. 1. Known for the Sagrantino grape, the area around Montefalco had a particularly strong harvest in 2015. Wineries especially worth a visit include the historic Cantina Scacciadiavoli, the region's oldest, which was founded by a Roman prince; the sleek, modern Tenuta Castelbuono, designed by the sculptor Arnaldo Pomodoro, where the winery is a work of art in itself; the family-run, organic Antonelli, where couples can also enjoy cooking classes; the scenic Arnaldo Caprai, where visitors can take in breathtaking panoramas of the region; and Colpetrone, which connoisseurs may recognize because of its wide distribution in the U.S. Dinner in a local restaurant, such as Alchimista, will include the wine in the dishes, such as Sagrantino-braised beef. Cap it all off at tiny, out-of-the way jazz and wine bar Microclima (Piazza San Domenico 27) in Foligno, which pours the best local labels, of course.

FOR URBANITES

Boston

This is a boom year when it comes to city charms for Boston. A Picasso exhibition is visiting the Museum of Fine Arts Boston, and the museum started the year by acquiring Frida Kahlo's "Dos Mujeres." Beantown's first edition of the Public Art Walk has plans to expand, incorporating new neighborhoods into an itinerary that already includes Back Bay, Beacon Hill, the Financial District and the North End; the Museum of Science just unveiled a 4-D theater and a new three-story gallery overlooking the Charles River; and gourmands will thrill to three new restaurant openings from award-winning local chef Ken Oringer, including Uni, which recently transformed from acclaimed sushi bar to high-end Asian-inspired global restaurant, with one-of-a-kind dishes such as mozzarella en carozza with unagi, and Chiang Mai duck carnitas.

Where to Stay: Both The Eliot Hotel and The Colonnade are offering a Museum of Fine Arts Boston package, which includes accommodations, two passes to the museum — where you can catch those Picassos — and breakfast for two.

NOTICE OF PUBLIC HEARING ON PROPOSED RATE INCREASES PHILADELPHIA WATER DEPARTMENT

Notice is hereby given that the Philadelphia Water, Sewer and Stormwater Rate Board will hold a public hearing on the Philadelphia Water Department's (PWD) proposal to increase water, sewer, stormwater, fire connection and miscellaneous charges. Under the process set out by ordinance, the Rate Board will review PWD's proposal and make its decision in June. PWD proposes to increase rates in two phases. The first phase would begin July 1, 2016 and the second phase would begin July 1, 2017. The effect of the proposed increases on a typical residential water and sewer customer with a 5/8" water meter and usage of 600 cubic feet (4,488 gallons) of water per month would be as follows:

Fiscal Year	Requested Increase Of Monthly Bill	Additional Monthly Water & Sewer Charge	Average Monthly Bill Total
July 1, 2016	6.2%	$4.20	$71.60
July 1, 2017	an additional 5.5%	$3.90	$75.50

PUBLIC INPUT HEARING
Thursday, April 7, 2016, 8:30 a.m.
City Council Chambers
City Hall, 4th Floor
Philadelphia, PA

This hearing is intended to continue to provide information about the proposed rate increases, and to allow members of the public to tell the Rate Board their views on the proposed rate increases. If you are unable to attend, correspondence for the Rate Board may be addressed to: WaterRateBoard@phila.gov or

Philadelphia Water, Sewer and Stormwater Rate Board
City of Philadelphia Law Department
Attn: Frances Beckley
1515 Arch Street, 17th Floor
Philadelphia, PA 19102

The deadline for written testimony is Monday, April 18, 2016.

The Department's proposal can be found at www.phila.gov/water/rateboard. City Hall is wheelchair accessible. Anyone who requires special arrangements for persons with disabilities may call Laura Copeland at the Philadelphia Water Department at 215-685-4902.

PHILADELPHIA WATER

An open-and-shut case

As the carousel at the airport luggage terminal begins to spin, you wait with a hundred other tired passengers for your suitcase. Your phone is dead, you've just gotten off a red-eye and you want to get out as soon as possible. There it is! Just as you've grabbed the handle, another hand reaches out. Turns out, it's the wrong suitcase.

A company called Raden wants to end this problem — and other unexpected technology woes — with its new line of sleek, chic, smart luggage. It's not quite the first of its kind, but Raden most recently raised $3.5 million in seed funding to grow its Bluetooth-powered suitcases, with the hopes/expectations of becoming as seamless in the lives of consumers as a Fitbit or an iPhone.

Each suitcase, ranging from $295 for a carry-on to $395 for check-in sized bag, creates its own network with low energy Bluetooth and allows owners to track the their bags through an iOS app. Not only will it alert owners when their bags are coming around the luggage carousel, it can provide the weight of suitcase and charge external devices via two built-in USB ports. There's a pop-out battery that powers the whole operation, which, according to the brand, "passed all relevant regulatory certifications and testing standards for travel and battery powered electronics." Now if it only had a mini bar…

Bags can be ordered at Raden.com. ALYSON FLORIDIA

Sixers desperately seeking 10th victory by lobbing barrage of threes

The injured, inexperienced and ailing team is struggling now more than ever.

ANDY JASNER
@AndyJasner
sports@metro.us

The 76ers are undermanned and overmatched each night. That's hardly a secret.

With an extra barrage of injuries to the likes of Jerami Grant, Nerlens Noel, Jahlil Okafor and Richaun Holmes, the Sixers need to play a near perfect game to come up with a victory. Just one more win will be No. 10 and avoid tying them with the 1972-73 Sixers, who won only nine games.

In order to win, coach Brett Brown has to be even more creative than usual.

In their loss to the Charlotte Hornets on Tuesday night, Brown decided to let the Sixers launch a plethora of shots from beyond the arc.

The Sixers put up 44 shots from three-point land, setting a new record. Their 16 converted three-pointers tied a franchise record.

It's not an ideal way to play. But it's their way right now. Who can argue?

"By and large, if we're open I want our guys shooting, especially with the roster that we have right now," Brown said. "It's our best chance to win, to catch fire from three and find ways to score."

The Sixers still limped to their 10th straight loss and fell to 9-66.

"That is a high volume of threes," Brown said. "But I think, by and large, the team you're looking at is not the team that we started with, and I hope we play to our strengths."

The Sixers can only put their heads down and work until the season's merciful end. GETTY IMAGES

Keep in mind that Carl Landry was forced to start at center and play in the low post against Cody Zeller and Al Jefferson.

Undermanned and overmatched for sure.

But the Sixers continued to compete by taking all of those three-pointers. Why not?

"We shot some really good shots and just missed some," point guard Ish Smith said. "A lot of them went in and out. That's how the game goes. We just missed some. They were good shots in my mind."

Noel and Grant have already been declared out for Friday's rematch at Charlotte. Get ready for another full dose of three-pointers.

"It's the way to go and the coaches have been so supportive," said guard Nik Stauskas. "We have guys capable of knocking down plenty of shots. We need good looks and hope we get hot. As long as we're taking good shots, it's OK. Nothing seems to come easy for us right now. We need to keep working hard and see what happens if we take that work into the game. The threes are all good if we execute within our offense."

FANTASY BASEBALL EARLY TIPS: DO'S AND DON'TS AS SEASON APPROACHES

OPINION

KYLE BISHOP
@RotoBaller

With Opening Day mercifully arriving next week, most leagues have held their drafts. The only thing left to do, of course, is play the games. Here are a few tips to help you navigate the waters in the early going.

DO

Maintain a healthy watch list

The major platforms all include this feature. It's a godsend all season long, but particularly in the opening weeks of the season. It's a place to keep tabs on any and all available players you might find interesting, but didn't grab in the draft for one reason or another. During April, when players' stat lines can swing violently in either direction, the watch list can help keep you from losing anyone in the shuffle.

DON'T

Panic

The saying goes, "You can't win a championship in April, but you can lose it." Some owners might interpret that as a call to action, desperate to avoid falling behind early. It can be agonizing to wait for a scuffling star to get going while your rivals may be snatching up the players off to a hot start. As often as not, though, the best move is the move you don't make. For every J.D. Martinez, there are a dozen Emilio Bonifacios. A slow start doesn't doom you. Remember: It's a marathon, not a sprint.

DO

Be proactive

Wait, doesn't that contradict the last suggestion? Not at all. There's a difference between being proactive and overreacting. You should always have a general idea of how long of a leash you're willing to give every player on your roster. Paul Goldschmidt stumbling out of the gate is different from, say, Lucas Duda doing the same. This is where your draft prep can continue paying dividends well into the season. While it's tricky to separate signal from noise in such a small sample, a player struggling with something he's previously fallen prey to – injuries, contact issues, heavy platoon splits, etc. – may be a reliable indicator of future performance.

DON'T

Get attached to old values

We're all human, and as a result we all struggle with the concept of sunk costs. The second your draft ends, what anyone paid for any player ceases to be relevant (beyond keeper or dynasty considerations, of course). Hanging on to a player because you invested heavily in March simply results in compounding the error. This goes for emotional investment as well. Faulkner said, "In writing, you must kill your darlings." The same principle applies here. It doesn't matter how much you bought into the hype or potential of a player. If they aren't getting the job done, it's time to re-evaluate their place on your roster.

Enjoy the games, and good luck this season.

Aries Don't push unless you want to be pushed back. You are best off working at your own speed on projects you can do alone. Physical activity will help you blow off steam.

Taurus You'll attract interest in what you are trying to accomplish. Face-to-face conversations will bring good results. A romantic gesture will improve your personal life.

Gemini Focus on financial matters and look for ways to tie up your cash so you aren't tempted to spend it on unnecessary items. A personal situation will be riddled with disillusionment.

Cancer Express your feelings and share your ideas. You may not like change, but what transpires now will have beneficial results. A partnership will offer more than you expect.

Leo Travel plans will lead to professionally valuable information. A good opportunity will result from an important decision. When opportunity knocks, be ready to jump.

Virgo Don't let personal issues hold you back. Stay focused on detail and doing the best job possible. Walk away from anyone playing mind games with you.

Libra You should listen to someone else's plan, but don't feel obliged to follow it, and if control or bullying is applied, walk away. Protect your position and your right to choose.

Scorpio Reconnect with people you have worked or played with in the past. What transpires will lead to an interesting outcome with personal or professional options galore.

Sagittarius Sign up for affordable activities and ward off tempting offers made by associates who are not looking out for your best interests. Bring about the changes that will benefit you.

Capricorn Problems will surface if you cannot come to an agreement with someone you live with or work alongside. Look for opportunities that allow you to do your own thing.

Aquarius Market what you have to offer. Your determination and enthusiasm will help you get the support you need to address a lingering concern. If change is required, make it happen.

Pisces A partnership can help you advance. Divvy up the workload. Using your skills to the fullest will result in recognition and opportunities. Romance is encouraged. EUGENIA LAST
